Why this talk

Many people do not have a mentor, yet few people succeed without mentorship. If you speak to managers and successful business owners, they can account a number of mentors who have supported them on their journey and some coaches as well.

The journey of success can be difficult and people can easily be dejected if they are unclear and unmotivated about their goals, purpose and direction. Understanding the exponential power of mentorship as a graduate or management can help you reposition where you are and understand how to engage with you're your current experience and make the most of it.
